Contributors

CHESTER A. ARNOLD, Professor of Botany and Curator of Paleobotany, University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, first met Percy Train—the subject of his article—in 1932 and spent two months camping with him and his wife at Trout Creek in southeastern Oregon. From Dr. Arnold's tutelage at that time, there followed Train's preparation of a very considerable collection of plant specimens, now largely at the U. S. Dept. of Agriculture and the Smithsonian Institution, in Washington, D. C.

HERBERT G. BAKER, Professor of Botany and Director of the Botanic Garden, University of California, Berkeley, is a specialist in genecology and palynology, and also is a student of the history of biology. Before coming to California in 1957, he had left the University of Leeds to become Senior Lecturer in Botany at the University College of the Gold Coast (now Ghana), and subsequently was head of its Department of Botany.

THEODORE W. BOSSERT, Curator of the collection of Botanical Portraits, Hunt Botanical Library: see Huntia 1, p. 213, 1964.

JOHN V. BRINDLE, Curator of Prints and Exhibits, Hunt Botanical Library: see Huntia 1, p. 213, 1964.

GÜNTHER BUCHHEIM, Bibliographer at the Hunt Botanical Library, and now on assignment in Germany, first joined this staff in 1963 as Hunt Fellow in Botanical Bibliography. Formerly he was a taxonomic botanist on the staff of the Botanischer Garten und Museum, Berlin.

MISS ALICE M. COATS, Birmingham, England, has distinguished herself over the last fifteen years for her research and writings in the field of horticultural history. Author of several books and many articles, her latest work is Garden shrubs and their histories (London, 1963).

JOHN S. L. GILMOUR, Director of the University Botanic Garden, Cambridge, England, is a botanist, horticulturist, and bibliophile. For many years prior to World War II he was Assistant Director, Royal Botanic Gardens, Kew, and immediately after the War was Director of the Royal Horticultural Society test gardens at Wisley, in Surrey—a position he resigned in 1950 to avail himself of the opportunity to return to Cambridge, to assume his present post. At one time in his bibliophilic career he possessed one of the finest, if not the finest, private collections of local British floras. He has been a member of this library's Advisory Committee since 1961.

BERNARD E. HARKNESS, taxonomic botanist at Highland and Durand-Eastman Parks, Rochester, N. Y., has long been a student of the history of horticulture as it has developed in the Monroe County area of upstate New York. In researching for the present study on John Walton, he was assisted materially by his wife, Mabel Olney Harkness, who continues to write professionally under her own name.

GEORGE H. M. LAWRENCE: see Huntia 1, 214, 1964.

IAN MACPHAIL, formerly Bibliographer on the staff of this library, is now on the staff of the Beinecke Rare Book Library, Yale University, New Haven, Conn.

MISS DOROTHY S. MANKS, Librarian Emeritus of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society Library, Boston, is acknowledged as one of the leading authorities on American horticultural literature and its makers.

WILLEM D. MARGADANT, Assistant Librarian, Hunt Botanical Library, came to Pittsburgh from the University of Groningen, Holland, in 1962 where, as a taxonomic botanist and bibliophile, he made a reputation for himself as a specialist on bryological nomenclature and literature, particularly of the mosses. He is currently engaged in bibliographical studies in behalf of Bibliographia Huntiana.

MABEL G. OLNEY in private life is Mrs. Bernard E. Harkness. Consult also the entry above for Bernard E. Harkness.

RICHARD C. RUDOLPH, Professor of Oriental Languages and Chairman of the Department, University of California, Los Angeles, has studied extensively in China, Formosa, and elsewhere in the Orient. He is the author of numerous papers and several books on the Chinese literature, antiquities, and bibliography.

WILLIAM T. STEARN, formerly librarian of the Royal Horticultural Society's Lindley Library, and now a senior staff member of the Department of Botany, British Museum (Natural History), London, is well known among botanists and horticulturists everywhere for his scholarly researches into the historical backgrounds of their literature. Although primarily a taxonomist, his studies of botanical biography, travel and exploration, and associated bibliographic investigations have virtually made his name synonymous with botanical bibliography.
